

COVER STORY

Grand warehouse survives

Once it stored our sofas and valuables, cooled our produce — in an icehouse designed by Josias Joesler — and helped move our goods from hither to yon.

Today, the old Tucson Warehouse and Transfer building houses plumbing supplies, art galleries and craftsman shops.

For 91 years, the original solid-concrete building has served as a landmark on East Sixth Street.

Thanks to current co-owner Mark Berman — and city officials who've agreed to realign a roadway project that threatened Berman's business — this old warehouse should remain a viable part of downtown for years to come.

— Bonnie Henry

SEE STORY, E4